Parental Alienation (4)

Enforcement of Provisional Return Order of Taken Child

I. Introduction

Once a child is taken away, a taking away parent (often Japanese mother in Japan) might start programming a child to afraid of a left behind parent (often foreign husband in Japan). To avoid this parental alienation, we recommend the left behind parent to file a petition for provisional return order immediately after the child is taken away. We found it necessary to educate not only the court investigator but also the court enforcement officer not to believe what the child say about the left behind husband.

II . 2012 Tokyo High Court Judgment

In this regard, Tokyo High Court render a judgement on June 6th, 2012 (2012 Tokyo

High Court Judgment) confirming the judgment of the court enforcement officer not to enforce the provisional return order issued by the Tokyo Family Court for a left behind parent (father) because a 9-year-old child told him that he wanted to stay with a taking away parent (his mother).

2012 Tokyo High Court said that the judgment of the court enforcement officer is cool and cautious and therefore acceptable. 2012 Tokyo also said that the taking away parent did not bother the enforcement of the court enforcement officer is also cool and cautious and therefore acceptable. The taking away parent is not responsible for the judgement is not enforceable.

This is ridiculous. If the taking away parent programmed and washed the brain of his/her child, which is very easy, the provisional return order is not enforceable.

III. Conclusion

If your child is taken away by your wife, you should immediately file a petition for provisional return order against your wife to avoid the parental alienation of your child by her.

If you get the provisional return order, you should not be released at that point. You should also watch the enforcement of the judgment. You should warn the court enforcement officer (by yourself or experienced divorce attorney) not to rely on the child taken away by his/her mother because of the high possibility of the parental alienation by her.

In this case, the court enforcement officer shall refer to 2012 Tokyo High Court Judgment. You should fight the court enforcement officer (with experienced divorce attorney and parental alienation expert).
